The “Walk in the U.S., Talk on Japan” events, supported by the Prime Minister’s Office, are to increase awareness about Japan on a variety of issues and further develop the U.S. – Japan relationship through people-to-people diplomacy. Accompanying Ambassador Shimokoji will be a retired businessman from the auto industry, a retired Air Force General in Japan’s Ministry of Defense, a young CEO/owner of a travel company, and a Shizuoka University student to discuss issues on Japan’s society, business, education, security, politics and economy.

“These town halls are a wonderful opportunity for students and community members to informally discuss Japan-U.S. relations, ask questions, and interact with different representatives from Japan,” said Mitsuhiro Wada, Consul General of Japan in Detroit. “The friendship between Japan and the United States has never been stronger and events like this which promote open dialogue are a great way to enhance both countries’ economic and cultural contributions to one another.”
